INTERNATIONAL RUGBY UNION AUSTRALIA v BRITISH & IRISH LIONS SECOND TEST

THE LIONS, THE TOM RICHARDS CUP AND THE TOM RICHARDS MEDAL

The combined “home nations” (England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales) teams were referred to as the British Isles or the British rugby football team throughout the twentieth century. They were first dubbed the Lions by journalists covering the team’s 1924 tour of South Africa. The British Lions moniker was formally adopted in 1950. It was not until the Lions’ tour of Australia in 2001 that the tourists were officially called the British & Irish Lions. For the 2001 tour the Tom Richards Cup was inaugurated. It was awarded to the victors of series contested between the Lions and Australia, and honored Tom Richards, the only Australian-born footballer to represent both Australia (1908 and 1912) and the British Isles (1910). Richards also served at Gallipoli and in France during the Great War and was awarded the Military Cross. Australia won the inaugural Tom Richards Cup series in 2001, but the Lions won it in 2013. The cup has been retired but the player of the 2025 series will receive the Tom Richards Medal.

BRITISH ISLES/BRITISH & IRISH LIONS IN AUSTRALIA

In 1888 a British rugby team visited Australia for the first time. The tour was organised by Arthur Shrewsbury, Alfred Shaw and James Lillywhite, who observed that football in Australia had overtaken cricket in popularity. Therefore, they hoped a football tour might prove to be the financial success which their 1886/87 English cricket tour was not. The football tour was not sanctioned by the Rugby Union in England who considered it to have professional undertones. Yet, the players were required to sign statutory declarations stating they were not being paid. It was also a dual-code tour. They played 19 games of Australian football in Victoria, South Australia, and the Maitland district of New South Wales, winning six and drawing one of them, and 35 rugby matches in New South Wales, South Australia, Queensland, and New Zealand, of which the tourists won 27. Robert Seddon captained this side initially, but he drowned in a sculling accident on the Hunter River in Maitland on August 15. Thereafter, Andrew Stoddart became captain. The tour lasted 250 days and is retrospectively recognised as the first Lions tour.

The first official tour of Australia by a British Isles rugby football team was the four-Test series in 1899. The tourists won the series three matches to one. Overall, 21 matches were played by the squad of 23 footballers, and it was the first time all “home Unions” (England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales) were represented. They also played against a Victorian rugby team at the MCG. The tourists were in Australia again in 1904 and won all matches including the three Tests. For many years the British Isles teams regarded play in Australia as a warm-up prior to heading to New Zealand where Rugby Union was the dominant football code.

In Sydney, 1930, the crowd of 30,000 at the SCG watched Australia snatch a 6-5 victory, with Tom Lawton leading the charge. Even so, the Lions’ dominance prevailed throughout much of the twentieth century. In 1950 the team won all its games in Australia except for one against a New South Wales XV in Newcastle. The Lions won both Tests against the Wallabies in 1959, and, in 1966 the Lions won all five non-Test matches as well as the two Tests. The Lions dominated the second Test, winning 31-0, after a five try blitz in the second half. It was the highest ever Test rugby winning margin at the time.

In 1989 New Zealand was left out of the Lions’ itinerary, the team touring Australia only. The Lions won 11 of the 12 matches played over six weeks and had a 2-1 Test series victory. The Wallabies, with Nick Farr Jones at the helm, triumphed in the first Test in Sydney 30-12, while the Lions were victorious in Brisbane, 19-12. An unforgettable error by David Campese in the final game in Sydney cost the Wallabies the Test and the series. Of the three Tests played in 2001, the Wallabies won 2-1 with Matt Burke performing well for the Wallabies. The last Lions tour of Australia was in 2013, the tourists winning the series 2-1.

DID YOU KNOW?

The 1888 British rugby team played an Australian football match on the MCG. It was their first ever match under Australian football rules, and it was against Victoria’s reigning premier, Carlton. The June 16 game drew much publicity and more than 25,000 spectators to the MCG, but the Brits were totally outclassed, losing 14 goals to three. The Argus reported, “The red, white and blue on the turf looked well, though on the scoring board it looked a sickly show.”

ANDREW STODDART – BRITISH & IRISH LION AND MCC HON. LIFE MEMBER

Andrew Stoddart, a member of Arthur Shrewsbury’s cricket team which had played a Test in Sydney during February 1888, took over as captain of the British football team after Robert Seddon’s death. As an amateur member of the English cricket team, he was elected an Honorary Life Member of the Melbourne Cricket Club on February 25, 1888. Stoddart is the only person to have captained England/Britain in cricket, rugby and Australian football.

RUGBY UNION AT THE MCG

- There have been 21 rugby football matches (including curtain raisers) at the MCG.
- The first rugby football match played on the MCG was between Waratah, a leading Sydney rugby club, and Carlton, the famous Australian football club, on June 29, 1878.
- The highest score in a rugby match at the MCG is 56. This has been achieved twice. On June 30, 1951, a New Zealand XV scored 13 tries to defeat an Australian XV, 56 to 11. In the curtain raiser to the July 11, 1998, Bledisloe Cup match at the MCG, the Australian Barbarians team defeated Victoria 56 to 22.
- The greatest winning margin for a rugby match at the MCG is 51 points, when a South African XV scored 13 tries on June 18, 1921, to defeat Victoria 51 points to nil.
- The most points scored by a rugby player in a game at the MCG is 28. Ron Jarden of a New Zealand XV scored 28 points, consisting of five tries, five conversions and one penalty, on June 30, 1951, against Victoria.
- There have been four international rugby Test matches at the MCG. All have been Bledisloe Cup games between Australia and New Zealand. Australia has won twice and New Zealand twice.
- The largest attendance for a Rugby Union match at the MCG is 90,119 for the Australia v New Zealand Bledisloe Cup/Tri Nations Test match in 1997.
